

IT'S TIME TO BRING KENTUCKY'S FUTURE TO FRUITION

“Kentucky’s Winning Strategy”

A UNIFYING VISION FOR OUR COMMONWEALTH’S ECONOMIC FUTURE

The following is an op-ed from Kentucky Chamber President and CEO Ashli Watts.

ASHLI WATTS
PRESIDENT & CEO
Kentucky Chamber of Commerce

We live in a time where our politics and opinions are driving deeper divisions in our society than we have seen for generations. This is as true in Kentucky as it is across the nation, where we not only anticipate a divisive presidential election next year but a high-profile gubernatorial election in just a few months. Tensions between communities, neighbors, and even families are running high.

The intensity of our disagreements makes it all too easy to forget that we, as Kentuckians, actually agree on quite a lot. I'm talking about issues like good jobs, a strong workforce, healthy communities, a growing population, reliable infrastructure, affordability, economic growth, and quality education. These are priorities shared by most, if not all, Kentuckians.

Uniting Kentuckians around these shared priorities is the primary goal of “Kentucky’s Winning Strategy” – a new report from the Kentucky Chamber of Commerce that outlines a unifying vision for our Commonwealth’s economic future.

This document brings together the ideas of Kentucky’s top business leaders for growth and economic prosperity in Kentucky and articulates a clear vision for how to make Kentucky one of the best states in the nation to work, do business, and raise a family.

“Kentucky’s Winning Strategy” lists ten focus areas and provides a vision for what success looks like in each area.

For example, one key focus area is our workforce. For decades, low rates of workforce participation have held back Kentucky’s economic potential, ranking the seventh lowest in the nation at just 57.8 percent. The business community’s vision for success in this area includes a workforce participation rate that is among the top ten states in the nation and a workforce growth rate that outpaces our competitor states.

KENTUCKY CHAMBER WOMEN’S SUMMIT FOCUSES ON

Key Role of Women in Business, Politics, Community

In July, the Kentucky Chamber of Commerce hosted its 3rd Annual Women’s Summit with over 600 attendees, celebrating, recognizing, and sharing the accomplishments of women across the Commonwealth.

During the event, Elizabeth McCoy was recognized as the recipient of the Kentucky Chamber’s 2023 Woman in Leadership Award.

KENTUCKY CHAMBER FOUNDATION’S WORKFORCE CENTER, KENTUCKY HOSPITAL ASSOCIATION ANNOUNCE PARTNERSHIP DEDICATED TO

Addressing Health Care Workforce Needs

The workforce shortage is having a critical impact across Kentucky’s key industries, particularly health care.

With a statewide hospital workforce vacancy rate of 17.1 percent, the Kentucky Hospital Association (KHA) has provided resources to hire five new regional manager positions dedicated to health care as part of the Kentucky Chamber Foundation’s Workforce Center Talent Pipeline Management (TPM®) program.

FROM THE FRONT

Kentucky's Winning Strategy

Another key focus area is a competitive tax code that encourages population growth and business development. Kentucky has taken great strides in recent years to improve the competitiveness of our tax code, but we envision a future where nonpartisan organizations like the Tax Foundation rank our tax climate as one of the top ten in the nation. Our current ranking is 18th.

Other focus areas include growing the size of our population, building a high-quality K-12 and postsecondary education system, investing in world-class infrastructure, protecting Kentucky's status as an affordable state, fostering a uniquely desirable quality of life, leveraging the economic potential of our signature industries, and strategically securing economic development and wage growth in all corners of the Commonwealth.

Bringing this vision for Kentucky's economic future to life will be a journey, requiring investment and ingenuity from all Kentuckians, but especially our state and local leaders charged with making major policy decisions. Civil disagreements on how to get from point A to point B should be expected – and even encouraged! That's how democracy is supposed to work in the first place.

What matters most is recognizing our numerous points of shared interests and agreeing on a shared vision for Kentucky's future. That's exactly what "Kentucky's Winning Strategy" provides.

As we head into the final months of Kentucky's governor's race and dive straight into the 2024 election cycle, my challenge to all Kentuckians – elected officials and constituents alike – is to ask yourselves, what is your role in turning this vision for Kentucky's future into a reality? The business community stands ready to continue advocating for a stronger Kentucky. But "Kentucky's Winning Strategy" merits a big-tent approach; and we look forward to a robust dialogue with our fellow Kentuckians on how to bring this vision for economic success and prosperity to life.

Addressing Health Care Workforce Needs

The TPM® program is designed for businesses to play a larger role in building their talent supply chains. Working with the regional hospital TPM® managers, hospitals and health care systems will have the opportunity to join together in a collaborative effort to implement and build talent supply chains, align public and private resources to develop and maintain talent pipelines, share regional best practices to support critical jobs, and more.

"The Kentucky Chamber is committed to supporting health care providers across the Commonwealth during a critical time. By working with KHA to dedicate five TPM® project manager positions to the hospital industry, this partnership allows us to take an even deeper dive into exploring short-and long-term solutions to the workforce crisis," said Kentucky Chamber President and CEO Ashli Watts. "We are so proud to partner with the Kentucky Hospital Association to bring real, meaningful change to this industry and ensure Kentucky has the health care workforce to meet our state's needs together."

"This collaboration between KHA and the Kentucky Chamber is crucial in addressing the workforce crisis in hospitals," noted KHA President and CEO Nancy Galvagni. "By encouraging and empowering individuals to choose health care professions, we can ensure the delivery of quality care to our communities, while creating new and rewarding career opportunities for the next generation of health care professionals. We are excited to lead this project to support our members during the current workforce crisis."

PRESENTED BY FIFTH THIRD BANK

McCoy is the CEO of Planters Bank, which just celebrated its 25th anniversary, with 14 financial services offices throughout Kentucky and Tennessee and total assets exceeding $1.5 billion.

McCoy has been involved in many organizations and groups across the western Kentucky region, the Commonwealth, and the nation. She also served as the Kentucky Chamber's fourth female chair in its 68-year history in 2014 and has continued her involvement since then.

Participants at the event heard from women on a variety of topics throughout the day.

Whitney Austin, a survivor of a mass shooting, was interviewed by Renee Shaw of Kentucky Educational Television on her experiences, the organization she created to address gun violence, and her work with lawmakers in Kentucky and Washington D.C.

A panel including Jennifer Hancock of Volunteers of America Mid-States, Adria Johnson of the Metro United Way of Louisville, and Beth Kelly, Ph.D. of the Kentucky Center for Statistics, moderated by Beth Davisson of the Kentucky Chamber Foundation discussed opportunities for improvement in the workplace and shared advice for supporting other women.

As 100,000 women left the workforce in Kentucky during the pandemic citing caring for their children as the reason, Johnson shared that Metro United Way has begun offering child care benefits the same as they would health care benefits.

Ashlee Rich Stephenson, senior political strategist and consultant of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce spoke on the national political environment, trends across the nation and in Kentucky, and the role of female voters and candidates.

She shared data-driven statements on women in elections: women turn out higher than male voters, women don't look at one single issue and decide on a candidate for that one issue, and the views of female voters are the North Star to fundamentally predict how others will vote.

A panel of political leaders in Kentucky, including Rep. Rebecca Raymer, Rep. Keturah Herron, and Hilda Legg of Legg Strategies and moderated by Kate Shanks of the Kentucky Chamber shared their reasons for getting involved in politics, the importance of women being at the table as decisions are being made, and key issues that impact Kentucky.

Legg said confidence is essential to being in politics, which she said can be achieved by mentorship and lifting up other women. "If we don't bring young women into situations, supporting them and encouraging them, we are cutting ourselves short for the future of politics," said Legg.
