Stay in compliance and avoid costly penalties.

Millions of workers are required to wear respirators in various workplaces throughout the United States. Respirators protect workers against insufficient oxygen environments, harmful dusts, fogs, smokes, mists, gases, vapors, and sprays. These hazards may cause cancer, lung impairment, diseases, or death.

Not recognizing the applicability of this broadly applying and complex regulation is why the Respiratory Protection Standard (1910.134) is often one of the top 10 most frequently cited standards following workplace OSHA inspections. In fact, well intended employers providing respirators to employees who can't answer the questions below are likely already in violation.

1. How do we know which hazards pose danger?
2. When are they hazardous?
3. When does OSHA mandate respiratory protection?
4. Does OSHA require employers to identify and evaluate these airborne hazards?
5. What is "fit testing" and how does that work?
6. Is specific training required?
7. What are the medical implications and requirements?
8. How can we determine which respirator should be selected?

OSHA requires employers to develop and implement a written respiratory protection program with worksite-specific procedures and elements for required respirator use.

Even when respirators are worn voluntarily, certain program elements may be required to prevent potential hazards associated with the use of the respirator.

Many employers are unaware that OSHA requires the Respirator Program to be administered by a "suitably trained program administrator".

Who Should Attend

This new, one-day program is designed for employers who need training for their Respirator Program Administrator, seek additional clarity on the OSHA respiratory protection regulation's applicability to their workplace, or those employers with an established program who would benefit from a program gap review.

Process operations employees, maintenance employees, sanitation employees, site engineers and human resources leaders are a few of the job titles who will benefit from this course.

Course Topics

- Airborne hazards and their classifications
- Chemical exposure concepts
- Respirator selection logic
- How airborne levels of airborne hazards are determined
- Types, classification, and functionality of respirators
- Change out and replacement schedules
- Medical evaluation process
- Training
- Fit Testing
- Written Program Requirements

Attendees will be provided with additional reference materials, sample written programs, checklists, and training resources.
